Course Description

This full-day training will focus on homelessness and housing from a trauma-informed lens. Participants will review current research on the impact of trauma on our physiological, psychological, behavioral, and interpersonal functioning and will then apply this trauma-informed framework to the services they are providing to people experiencing homelessness. Examples from housing agencies involved in housing people experiencing chronic homelessness, HIV and domestic violence will all be reviewed. Real case studies applying the trauma-informed framework will be used in individual and group activities. *This training is part of a series, however, participants who did not attend the prior trainings (Trauma-Informed Foundations & Trauma, Substance Use, and Mental Health) will be able to fully participate.
