

Assessing for High Risk Microlearning

Course Description

In this self-guided microlearning, participants will learn about the different types of high risk behaviors, how to identify and describe them objectively, and how to use screening methods. Participants will be provided with an overview of high risk behaviors, who is at greatest risk for both self-harm and inter-personal violence, the value of intent, management and treatment, and proper disclosure. Additionally, participants will be exposed to evidence-based mitigation tools to increase safety when assessing an individual for both self-harm and/or harm to others.

Audience

All behavioral health professionals including therapists, case managers, peer support, administrative staff, executive staff, and any other direct service providers working within the behavioral health system of care.

Responsive Integrated Health Solutions (RIHS) is a County of San Diego Behavioral Health contracted program of the Academy for Professional Excellence, and a project of San Diego State University School of Social

