Learning Objectives

What is the Interview for Decisional Abilities (IDA)?
The IDA, is a semi-structured interview tool developed for use by Adult Protective Services (APS) workers when gathering information about a client’s decision-making abilities.

What does the IDA do?
The IDA tool is designed to accurately capture an individual’s general understanding and personal appreciation of risk as well as the ability to make reasoned decisions about service options. The Cornell-Penn IDA can also help navigate a vulnerable adult’s right to refuse protective services – the right to self-determination.

How will using the IDA help an APS worker?
The Cornell-Penn IDA training program will provide APS workers the opportunity to practice using the IDA tool through a series of scenario-based exercises. Full participation in this training program will enable workers to:

- Identify the basic components of the Cornell-Penn IDA interview;
- Explain how and why the IDA tool can be useful in assessing a client's decisional ability;
- Increase a worker’s ability to gather information about a client's decision-making abilities;
- Improve communications with colleagues, supervisors and referring professionals about cases requiring decision-making assessments.
